I believe the only viable settlement is none at all. Microsoft has had its share of second chances and it's time they be punished for their crimes as any other company would surely be. Their repeated monopolistic activities and poor product making has lowered the standards of not only Americans, but the world as well. Don't let them bully the world into their mediocre ways.

So the next time you're at work and thinking that the best thing about the operating system you're using is FreeCell, consider asking your boss for a Mac. If he refuses, consider getting belligerent and making thinly-veiled threats of violence. What's the worst that could happen--you could get fired? Big deal; they made you use Windows anyway...
